Healing Anger

Question & Answer with Dadi Janki

There is a lot of anger and resentment between the generations, which is unproductive – it doesn't help things. How can we deal with this anger better?

To be angry is to be out of control and so someone who is angry deserves my love and compassion more than ever. If I can stay in my own peace and patience and keep my self-respect, I can help others to do the same. When I see people's good qualities, I empower both myself and them. This is true generosity.

By reaching a place of peace inside, I can share that feeling with younger - or older - people, so that they can free themselves from their own anger. If someone throws something at me, like an insult or an angry comment, I can just let it drop and leave it lying there. By not picking up another person's anger, I protect myself and at the same time give them the chance to take it back.

When I remember my own inherent goodness, I can share it with others. For this I need to spend time in silence and really get to know and love my true, spiritual self and connect with the Divine. At the Brahma Kumaris, we use the words, 'Om shanti', which mean 'I am a peaceful soul', to remind us of who we really are - no matter what is happening around us. To be peaceful is to be powerful. It is also our natural way of being.

SPACE FOR QUIETNESS

Taking just a minute
I sit comfortably,
Quiet and still.
In the quietness
I watch my mind,
I feel my senses.
Gently I speak to them:
"For a moment stop,
Just stop.
Relax and be calm.
Become free of hearing, seeing, doing.
Just stop."
Now I am in peace.
I am serene;
I am quiet.

That Old Teenager and Mother Thing - One Mother's Experience

“Things improved with my daughter much faster, and with less internal struggle, than I expected.”

The relationship with my daughter was getting really difficult. I could blame the fact she is a teenager, and doing all the things that teenagers do, but in all honesty that kind of blame wasn't helping the situation. It was time to do something positive about it, so I enrolled myself on an anger management course with the Brahma Kumaris in London.

I was in for some surprises. Number one, it's quite a shock to find out that you actually enjoy getting angry. Number two, I realised that I was carrying on the family tradition, since my dad was an angry person. The third shock came when I realised that anger was a thread that ran through quite a few of my relationships.

The group was really encouraging and the peace at Global Co-operation House started to help me approach the situation in a different way. Things improved with my daughter much faster, and with less internal struggle, than I expected.

Here are some practical tips that helped me along the way :

The course triggered off a series of realisations that have really helped the main relationships in my life. I could see that I grew up not really knowing who I was, just acting out negative ways of being, because it was the only way I knew of dealing with things. The meditation that we learnt in the course has helped me to discover that underneath all that is a nice person and I am getting to know that good person and liking what I see.

I still have my moments, but it's no longer inevitable that I will get annoyed with my daughter over every little thing. I have a choice. And out of love for my daughter my choice is to be the best I can be.

- Watch how you say things to the people around you; the tone of your voice is enough to send things spiralling down, so make the effort to stay respectful, even if your loved one is not being respectful towards you.
- Timing is crucial, when you speak to people who trigger your anger. Choose a moment when you feel calm.
- Getting angry can be like a fix, if it's been a habit for a long time. The first step towards change is to realise that you have had enough of the negative side of yourself and are ready to discover your good side.
- Wanting to be the best you can be for the people you love is a great motivator.

The wonderful sea air and views enhance the peaceful and uplifting atmosphere of the Brahma Kumaris' Lighthouse Retreat Centre, Worthing.

Wellbeing in Education

“Every human being has goodness within.”

Sister Jayanti, Director of BKWSU (UK), spoke to head teachers and educationalists at two conferences this year at Wellington College in Berkshire. The first conference was on Happiness and Wellbeing (18th January) and the second on Spiritual Intelligence (10th June). Wellington College has attracted national and international interest by teaching ‘the skills of wellbeing’ as part of the curriculum. Here is an excerpt from Sister Jayanti’s Raya Yoga & Meditation session at the Happiness and Wellbeing Conference:

“Every human being has goodness within. It doesn’t matter about age, gender, colour, race, belief or whatever, there is goodness within. But what has happened is that layers of dust have accumulated and we’ve tended to look at the external, material things and forgotten about the inner being. As a result we have lost contact not just with the peace within but also with all the other treasures that are there within the self...”

As I go deep inside myself in silence, holding the thought of peace, allowing myself to connect with my own original blueprint, I discover the truth, the joy, the purity and the love that is there. Discovering these treasures within is the key to freedom. We all talk about freedom and very much want to have that experience. When I was 18, I thought it meant being able to come and go, as I choose! But, of course, it’s the freedom to be who I truly am - the freedom to express my original qualities. To be able to sustain those qualities, I need to make time for myself in silence...”

Athletic Minds - Exploring Spiritual Intelligence in Sport

Three years ago teenagers across the UK were offered an amazing opportunity - the chance to compete in an Olympic Games in their own country. Since the announcement that London would host the 2012 Olympics, excitement has been growing across the UK - helped by Team GB’s record haul of 19 gold medals in Beijing.

What better timing could there have been for giving energy to a new and exciting initiative to explore more deeply the connection between sporting excellence and the power of the mind? Called 'Athletic Minds', the idea is to bring together professionals and practitioners working in sport and assist them in personal development and performance enhancement, using spiritual techniques that have their origins in the ancient wisdom of the East.

There is growing interest in understanding how such methods of using concentration and visualisation can have a critical influence on one’s state of mind and so improve, amongst other things, sporting performance.

An event is being planned that will explore spiritual intelligence and sport in greater depth, in an open environment of sharing and learning. It's scheduled to take place at the Global Retreat Centre, Oxfordshire in June 2009. If you're interested in taking part - or have ideas you would like to share, please contact the Athletic Minds team at: athleticminds@uk.bkwsu.org.

Tao of the Traveller - the Seven Keys to Enlightenment

By Tinaka Niven

Film review first published in The South African and The New Zealand Times, April 2008.

Produced by Australian actor, director, producer and one-time winner of the Australian Arts Award, Robin Ramsay, Tao of the Traveller is a magical journey to magical destinations.

Tao of the Traveller follows a young woman on her journey of self-discovery; this film brings us the Seven Keys of Enlightenment. Taking us from the deserts of Australia to the mountains of New Zealand and also to India, the scenery is breathtaking and not only magical, but real. Meditation is the key to many people's inner peace and, whether it is your way or not, Tao of the Traveller is truly a visual delight and if you don't understand the concept of meditation, it provides the desire to learn about it.

Taken from Robin and scriptwriter Barbara Bossert's own experiences of Brahma Kumaris, a university that teaches meditation and helps people understand their inner strength, they faced the biggest challenge of putting this concept into film. Of course this was made a lot easier with the people Robin had on board. Dave Clayton of Simply Red fame is the musical director, composing the music and playing the keyboards for the movie. He wrote a song with Lucinda Drayton especially for the movie. Tao of the Traveller was premiered at the Fallbrook Film Festival in California in April 2008.

To see for yourself, you can get a taster at www.taotraveller.com or a copy of the DVD from www.bkpublications.com

Throughout April 2008 Robin Ramsay toured with the film around the UK. In Scotland preview screenings took place at cinemas to packed audiences in Glasgow, Edinburgh and Aberdeen.

RECIPE from Pure & Simple - Cooking for a Busy Lifestyle

"Food cooked carefully with joy will always taste better than food cooked with a negative attitude."

From the review of the book in 'The Vegetarian', the Magazine of the Vegetarian Society, Autumn 2008.

Fennel and Potato Stir-Fry with Peanuts

(Serves 4-6)

- 1 Heat the oil in a medium-sized pan. When it is hot, add the mustard seeds and cover.
- 2 After the seeds have popped, add asafoetida and cook for a few seconds. Add the peanuts and fry for a minute, then add the chopped fennel.
- 3 Stir the mixture, allowing the fennel to cook for a couple of minutes. Add chillies and chopped potatoes, stir everything together, cover and turn the heat to low.
- 4 Allow to cook, stirring occasionally, until the potatoes are cooked, adding 1 tbsp of water if necessary.
- 5 Add the roasted chickpea (gram) flour, stir, cover and allow the chickpea flour to cook for a couple of minutes, still on a low heat and stirring occasionally to make sure nothing sticks at the bottom. Then add the ground cumin and coriander seed mix.
